Skin consultation with Estée Lauder training manager Audrey Ang

president of corporate/MNC for a telco Lorraine Lim, and marketing manager for Singapore Tourism Board Izan Satrina Llewellyn.

Midway, image consultant Sheila Wong, the luncheon's dsignated speaker on the beauty of confidence began her address quite charmingly. "As I look around this table of vivacious women, all of whom have an opinion – be it on politics, art, the environment, and all radiating such confidence, I have to throw out my speech. It's not rocket science that looking beautiful stems from within. When you're fulfilled on every level – work, family, social life – it shows on your face. You glow."

Be that as it may, we girls know that a little skincare help never hurts in maintaining one's radiance so at that point, Katrina Liew invited training manager Audrey Ang to share with us the benefits of Re-Nutriv Ultimate White Lifting Creme. Specifically designed for Asian skin – so that you know your environmental skin needs are catered for – yet based on an original beauty recipe from American beauty doyenne Mrs Estée Lauder herself, the new Ultimate White Lifting Creme is part of the Estée Lauder Re-Nutriv range of skincare products. The women were delighted at the silver-ribboned box that encased the creme for their personal use, as well as an invitation to a facial – gifts to thank them for attending the ever productive Power Lunch, a signature BAZAAR event.

The afternoon ended with cake and raspberry ice-cream, and a potpourri of fresh fruits. Lorraine Lim, who had just gotten registered for marriage, was gently prepped for the trials and joys of marriage by the women present that day. Shireen Kandiah-Fuad unleashed a hilarious tale from her courtship days saying she'd always thought it amazing that her husband was able to cook a complex traditional Malay dish for her on one of their early dates and it was only after marriage she discovered that the one toiling in the kitchen had really been his dear aunt! Laughter abounded as goodbyes were bade. ■

Double Impact

It's all about confidence and the perfect cream. And the women at the latest BAZAAR Power Lunch had the former in their DNA. By Sunitha Thayaparan.

An afternoon of luxe Creme and cuisine awaits

Lawyer and entrepreneur Tina Fazlita has the entire table in stitches. She's relating how once on a business trip to London, she was woken at some ungodly hour by her husband, wondering if she could please order a McDonald's Delivery for him. "True story!" laughs the slightly jet-lagged Fazlita, she'd just arrived from the UK the night before and looks none the worse for wear at this BAZAAR Power lunch co-hosted by Estée Lauder at the beautifully appointed Royal Suite of Hotel Nikko Kuala Lumpur.

Inevitably, when you corral a group of high-powered women for a spectacular meal – the roasted breast of chicken with spinach accompanied by seasonal vegetables, du chef potatoes and wild mushroom sauce was perfection – you can expect the conversation to the run the gamut from discussing hot properties to locating the best tapas bar in the city. Banker Sherilyn Foong and group CRM manager Shireen Kandiah-Fuad turned out to be old friends and caught up on news immediately, and although others were new to each other, commonalities were quickly identified.

The afternoon started off with a skin analysis, brow fixing, and light touch-ups at the make-up bar. Estée Lauder Malaysia brand general manager Katrina Liew and senior PR manager Yap Mei Fong were in the house along with BAZAAR's editor-in-chief Natasha Kraal to host an array of women from the corporate world. The list included consultant dietitian and published author Indra Balaratnam, vice-
